

Democracy needs a network

Democracy Together is a multinational initiative: a worldwide network of think tanks, open to young people, attentive to Africa and Europe.

Democracy is in crisis

Understood as respecting freedoms, the state and the rule of law, democracy is in crisis in France, in many other countries, and within the international community.

Causes and symptoms abound

- Rise of populism
- Erosion of democratic institutions
- Foreign interference
- Socio-economic inequality
- Impacts of climate change

“Liberal democracy must be defended today, but we must also prepare its evolution, or even its refounding.”

Several think tanks dedicated to democracy are already working toward this. But many operate in isolation, focused on the problems of the Western world: their impact is reduced, and the issues facing emerging countries are minimized.

Our response: a worldwide network of think tanks

We are convinced there is room for a multinational initiative built on a network of think tanks. We have named it Democracy Together.

Open to young people

The network makes room for them and seeks to involve them.

Worldwide

It brings together developed and emerging countries.

Africa, Europe, Latin America — and beyond

Three strong anchors in a network built to reach every continent.

Our wager: a collective democratic intelligence, to meet present and future global challenges, as part of restoring an international order that respects and is respected.

To become a global reference for advancing liberal democratic thought.

By creating an inclusive ecosystem, where innovative ideas contribute to more resilient and more equitable societies.

Five missions

-  Spark new thinking.
-  Gather this thinking, share it, and open it to debate.
-  Build capacity, especially in developing countries, through training, exchanges, and targeted funding.
-  Support youth involvement.
-  Bring together scientific, diplomatic and economic perspectives, and promote geographic, cultural and gender diversity in democratic debate.

A vast field

Institutional questions and questions of democratic life, which arise differently from country to country:

education

health

environment

standards

the role of AI

digital governance

the place of science citizen participation

fighting corruption

democratic transitions

The contributions gathered are also intended to become objects of research, for academia and beyond.

Short contributions, quality-controlled

This is how we will build this collective intelligence: through the exchange and sharing of short contributions.

Short

500 to 1,000 words

Many contributions are expected, and a relevant, well-considered idea can always be expressed concisely.

Quality

Quality is controlled, to favor the most significant, useful and innovative ideas.

Peer reviewed

Who judges quality? Not us!

Peers, chosen by the contributors themselves. It's one of the distinctive features of our initiative.

KOHOP, the network's platform

Bilingual, soon multilingual, KOHOP will publish members' contributions. Its principle: peer judgment, in the manner of a scientific journal.

1

The author submits a contribution

500 to 1,000 words, with links to more detailed texts, available in one click.

A wager on intellectual honesty and transparency.

2

The author names reviewers

No anonymity: their names and their analyses are published alongside the text.

Published texts belong to the contributors, not to the platform.

3

The editor-in-chief oversees

They can disqualify a reviewer who is too close to the author, a co-author for example.

Free and open access for readers.

4

The author revises

2 weeks

They receive the feedback and decide whether to take it into account.

Publishing on KOHOP requires joining the network.

5

The editor-in-chief decides

They accept or decline the publication. Two positive reviews amount to near-automatic acceptance, barring obvious excess or a breach of the charter.

The platform quickly widens the network's circle of "insiders".

Who's behind the project

Abdou Samb

Senegalese engineer and mathematician, chairman of FRS Consulting in Paris, advisor to the European Commission on digital transformation. Named “African of the Year 2025” at the Mission Africa Awards.

Philippe Kourilsky

French biologist, honorary professor at the Collège de France, former director of the Institut Pasteur, member of the French Academy of Sciences. Author of more than 350 scientific publications and about ten books, several of them on democracy.

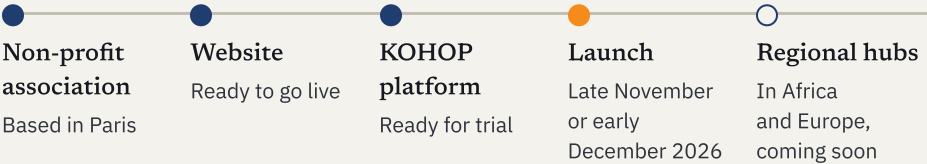

Pierre Vimont

French diplomat, former French Ambassador to the United States, former Executive Secretary-General of the European External Action Service (EEAS), senior fellow at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Secretary-General of the association: Armelle Chapalain

Where do we stand?

Funding

Member dues, donations, grants from institutions such as the European Union, and selected partnerships with companies committed to corporate social responsibility. A fund dedicated to collaborative projects will be created, and the association will adopt performance indicators.

Your think tank has a place in the network

Any institution with think tank activity can join, even if it also carries out other work, such as training. Membership requires signing a short charter.

What the network offers you

-  Greater visibility for your work.
-  Streamlined administration, as much as possible, for emerging think tanks.
-  Training, exchanges and targeted funding.
-  Conferences, symposiums and research projects.
-  Complete freedom of action, and publications that remain yours.
-  A fund dedicated to collaborative projects, coming soon.
